The Capture Of Hess

The true story of how Rudolf Hess, ex-deputy Fuehrer of Nazi Germany, was captured after he had dramatically flown to Scotland in May, 1941, and had parachuted from a crippled plane, is told today, for the first time, on page 2 of the "Telegraph."
Hess was caught by Mr.
Daniel McBride, who at the time was attached to the Royal Corps of Signals. Mr.
McBride tells the story of the drama in his own words.
Second and final instalment of this interesting and historical narrative will appear in the "Telegraph" tomorrow.

Royal Navy To Be Cut By 60 %

London, Mar. 6.
Britain will reduce the Royal Navy by 60 per cent this year.

The Admiralty announced on Wednesday in its budget estimates for 1947-48 that the total number of naval officers, seamen, boys and Royal Marines would be reduced from 1946-47 maximum of 462,800 to 192,000 during the twelve months beginning April 1.

Coupled with reductions announced earlier this week by the War Office and Air Ministry, the Navy slash will bring an overall reduction of 2,430,000 in the British Land, Sea and Air Forces.

The comparative figures for the three services are—

Army 1946-47 2,950,000, 1947-48
1,210,000.
Navy 1946-47 493,000, 1947-48
102,000.
R.A.F. 1946-47 760,000, 1947-48
370,000.

The biggest savings in the new naval estimates will be £44,823,000 in the payroll. But the Admiralty said it also intended to lop off £10-115,000 in shipbuilding, repairs and maintenance. The estimates made no reference to the number of ships that would be maintained by the Navy.—Associated Press.

LANDSLIDE KILLS 10, INJURES 60

La Paz, Bolivia, Mar. 5.
The authorities reported that 10
persons were killed and 60 injured in a landslide which swept across the highway running up into the mountains from La Paz.

Heavy rains had undermined the cliff alongside the highway, and it gave way. A bus and two houses were buried. The landslide also crushed a number of women washing clothes in a stream at the foot of the cliff.—United Press.

EDITORIAL

Income Tax—Cavalier Style

GOVERNMENT is apparently determined to make the imposition of income tax in Hongkong a fait accompli—and hang public opinion or the consequences. Possibly it is actuated into taking this line as a result of past experience, confident that the community is largely indifferent and inarticulate; that, in any event, it can force through the measures it feels necessary, whether they be popular or thoroughly disliked. Government's time-table mirrors its intentions; an official statement on income tax proposals is "expected to be made by the end of this week or the beginning of next" (say, March 11), and the proposals are intended to become effective April 1. Hardly an adequate period for satisfactory public debating on measures which are certain to have far-reaching effects on the financial and social structure of the colony.

At this stage we are not decrying income tax proposals, because we are still to be made aware of them. But we do strongly protest the cavalier fashion in which it is intended to foist them on the community.
It is immaterial whether it is the desire of the Imperial Government that Hongkong should bear direct taxation, or whether it can be proved that raising of revenue by such a means is a dire necessity. For every argument on these lines, the public can counter with stations demonstrating that under the present form of administration income tax is nothing short of a compulsory levy with no guarantees that the revenue will be used in a manner desired by the taxpayers. The public has a right to know why there should be all this rush about introducing income tax; and why the apparent urge to maintain secrecy on details until the last possible moment? Singapore tested out public reaction to the same proposition and when this had become thoroughly expressed, postponed the idea for 12 months. This, at least, is a democratic way of handling such a vital issue.
Although Hongkong hasn't yet a democratic form of constitution, it likes to believe that government is capable of following those principles. Government will be well advised to appreciate that the public will demand reasonable opportunities to make its feelings known before any income tax proposals become a legal instrument; and our Unofficial Members would do well to make haste and find out just how the community feels on the subject, for there are some important and far-reaching debates ahead of them.

OUTRAGES IN PALESTINE

Terrorists Strike At Many Points

Jerusalem, Mar. 5.

A bomb explosion outside Haifa to-day completely wrecked the Tax Assessment building in Hadar Carmel, the Jewish quarter on the slopes of Mount Carmel, it was officially announced to-night.

This was the second act of violence in Palestine today, an earlier one being a raid on the Orion Cinema in the heart of Jerusalem when a gang of four armed men held up the manager and got away with £200 in cash.

All British troops guarding security zones in Jerusalem were put on the alert to-night after the exploding, as red, green and again red flares shot into the sky in drizzling rain from command posts.
All traffic in the city came to a standstill.

Thirty minutes after the last exploding, terrorists lobbed hand-grenades at a military police lorry
in the Street of Prophets.
One British lance-corporal is reported to be injured.—Reuter.

OTHER OUTRAGES

Jerusalem, Mar. 5.
An unconfirmed report to-night said that a traffic police station had been blown up in East Jerusalem.

Irgun Zvai Leumi extremists struck three times to-night, but one was mistaken when a Jewish truck
was mistaken for a military vehicle and blown up.

A Jewish civilian truck struck a mine. The Jewish driver, Abraham Gordon, was killed and the Jewish passenger seriously injured. Both were fancy dress costumes and were en route to a Purim celebration ball.
In Haifa a bomb exploded under an Army truck, but there were no casualties.

Earlier, the Irgun had attempted to blow up a jeep, which touched off a Ben Gurion and the firing sent Army vehicles speeding through Jerusalem's streets. At the same time—and during a full alert—other extremists cut electric cables and wires in Jerusalem's Katamon district, plunging the area into darkness.

A Jewish truck was blown up near Rehovoth, the citrus garden city where the former President of the Jewish Agency, Dr Chaim Weizman, resides.—United Press.

SUMMONED TO BEDSIDE

Jerusalem, Mar. 5.
Jewish Agency chiefs have been summoned from Haifa and the United States to a conference here
at the bedside of their Chairman, David Ben Gurion, next Monday to discuss the present critical situation in Palestine and Britain's decision to refer the problem to the United Nations.

Ben Gurion is lying ill in the Hadasah Hospital. The Irgun Zvai
Leumi terrorists defied the curfew and martial law during the night to plaster posters on the walls of buildings in the city, reading: "We shall continue to fight against the British forces in spite of martial law and curfew."

The Hagannah, more moderate Jewish defence organization, also broke the curfew to counter the Irgun posters with others warning
the extremists against "unnecessary bloodshed".—Reuter.

Theoretical Success

Washington, Mar. 6.
China got nothing out of its suggestion that the UNRRA programme be altered, with emphasis on food and cotton instead of rehabilitation, possibly to the extent of $200,000,000.

The UNRRA Central Committee approved the UNRRA Far East Council
recommendation supporting the Chinese proposal.

But UNRRA immediately robbed the action of its practical effect by saying the China programme cannot be altered and therefore no funds are available to execute the Chinese proposals.—Associated Press.

INDIA POLICY CRITICISED

"Cardinal Blunders" Alleges M. P.

London, Mar. 5.

Sir John Anderson, former Governor of Bengal, to-day accused the British Government of making two "cardinal blunders" when he opened the Opposition attack on the India policy.

The first blunder, he said, was in handing over for practical purposes executive powers to representative bodies without being first assured that steady progress has been made towards a satisfactory constitutional settlement. He had challenged the Government on this point last December.

The second, and even greater,
blunder was being made now in fixing the definite date for handing over power.

"This," Sir John declared to a packed House, "holds up definite progress to a party that if they can only dig their toes in, stand fast and endure patiently the point of time will be reached at which they will be free to pursue their own course."

Another objection, he said, was that by fixing the date of Britain's withdrawal she was throwing away
her bargaining power. "We need that bargaining power for the discharge of certain solemn obligations.
It may well be that it is going to be more difficult than we have ever thought before to make our pledges effective."

Muslims and Sikhs could look after themselves, but there were the oppressed classes, who had been given very definite pledges, and other minorities desired and had been given to understand that they would receive protection—preferential treatment.

Sir John Anderson followed a five-thousand word speech by Sir Stafford Cripps, President of the Board of Trade, and member of the Cabinet
Mission to India. Mr Winston Churchill will speak to-morrow.

MOST CRITICAL STAGE

Sir Stafford Cripps, declaring that fixing of the time limit would give Indian parties opportunities to sink their differences, said: "We have now reached the final and most critical stage. We will have to take risks as to the effect of our action upon our own country, upon India and upon the rest of the world. We must not let fear of differences prevent us from doing what we believe to be right. We must not fail either ourselves or India through lack of decision at the critical time."

"We are convinced that if Indian parties at once set themselves to the task, they can arrive at a decision upon their new constitution by the date named. The only true basis for our future friendship is absolute freedom of choice on both sides. We shall continue during the time we remain in India to do all we can to assist, and we believe that this latest statement we make of our intentions will do something to help to bring the Indian communities and other leaders face to face with realities."

WORTHY AND FIT

Concluding, Sir Stafford said:
"Our whole policy has been based upon the acceptance of the Indian claim that they are worthy and fit for self-government and anyone who has the privilege of knowing these leaders could not for the moment
doubt that claim."

They, too, he said, found themselves enmeshed in a tangled skein of their own historical development and it was only by acts of real statesmanship that they could free themselves from internal antagonisms.

"Their problems cannot, I am convinced, be solved by the use of force. I would, therefore, urge upon them with all the force and sincerity at my command that they should seize this last and greatest opportunity for supreme statesmanship."—Reuter.

Court Demonstration By Frenzied Ghetto Women

Rome, March 5.

A shrieking, wailing crowd of 150 blackgarbed women of the ghetto turned Rome's azizies into bedlam to-day for 20 minutes and forced the postponement of the Italian Jewry's accused traitress Celeste di Porto, called the "Black Panther."

The women shouted "assassin" and "kill her." They were relatives of men who the Black Panther is accused of betraying to the Nazis
and Fascists.

One hundred rifle-carrying Car-abinieri guarded the court entrance and formed a barrier across the spectators' section and ringed the defendants bench where the black-haired, pale Celeste hung her head and twisted her hands in her lap.

There were less than 40 men present when the session opened.
The women were weeping and muttering before the defendants appeared. When the still attractive Celeste entered with seven other accused the uproar began.

Charges against Celeste allege that 26 of the persons who betrayed were executed by the Nazis without trial in the Ardeatine caves massacre. It was charged that the others, denounced to the Nazis for 6,000 to 60-000 lire rewards, were sent to German concentration camps and never heard again.—United Press.

Severe Outbreak Of Foot And Mouth Disease

London, Mar. 5.

A new outbreak of foot and mouth disease was announced to-day by the Ministry of Agriculture, and a Ministry spokesman charged that the most severe incidence of the disease in Britain since 1942 was "probably brought here from South America and from the continent."

He said the plague, to prevent the spread of which over 3,000 animals have been slaughtered this winter,
was "not of epidemic proportions"
but was of more than the average severity. "This year he said fewer than 50 outbreaks were reported.
In contrast he said that during the 1942 outbreak over 300 cases were reported but neither compared to the all-time epidemic record of 1923 when 2,000 cases were reported and over 60,000 head of cattle alone were slaughtered.

The British policy of slaughtering all infected or suspected animals, he said, was costly but vastly cheaper than the European policy of merely trying to isolate them. "The result of the European 'paranoid' policy was that, as he said, was that up to 3,000 cases weekly were reported
during the winter season from France, Holland and Belgium.

SHORT-SIGHTED POLICY
In Germany, he said, the foot and mouth disease in 1938 cost £23-000,000. He said it was largely the result of their non-slaughter policy.
"They do not practise our policy of destroying the infected herds and hence many carriers of the disease are free to spread it to clean animals," he said. "The natural result is that thousands have to be slaughtered eventually where we lose hundreds."

The foot and mouth disease affects only cloven-hoofed animals—cattle, goats, sheep, deer and etc.—but does not affect horses and only two cases of its appearance in humans were recorded.

"In our last severe plague in 1942," he said, "the disease almost always appeared first in pigs which ate swill, which included meat from Argentina—and Uruguay. That seems to indicate the source of the disease. Now by law all swill meat fed pigs must be boiled to kill the hoof and mouth virus."

He said the disease finally rested. He said an Argentine mission had taken some of the vaccine
back to their country to test it.
In some cases it seems to have beneficial effects," he said, "but it is still too early to tell whether it will finally cure the disease or prevent it."—United Press.

He said attacks this year appeared first almost equally between pigs and cattle. Most of the cattle illness he attributed to birds, especially starlings which, he said, may have brought the disease from infected herds across the Channel.

An Agriculture Ministry survey in Surrey, he said, is devoted to the study of the foot and mouth disease and is perfecting a vaccine on which

BRITAIN TO QUIT GREECE

London, Mar. 5.

The Foreign Under-Secretary,
Mr Christopher Mayhew, told the Commons to-day that despite Anglo-American discussions on future aid for Greece Britain intends to withdraw her forces from that country "as soon as practicable."

Mr Mayhew said Britain initiated
the talks with the United States because assistance to Greece was to end and Britain's commitments for financial assistance would terminate on March 30.

"It is evident that Greece will continue to need assistance in meeting
her minimum foreign exchange requirements after that date... I am not in a position to give any further information on these discussions while they are proceeding."

Reports from the United States have said that America asked Britain to keep her troops in Greece in exchange for assurances that the United States would give full financial assistance to the Greek Government.—

Steve Donoghue's Property Goes Under The Hammer

Blowbury, England, Mar. 6.

It was a sad day to-day for Pat Donoghue, son of the late champion jockey Steve Donoghue, as a trial of English law forced the auction of his father's home, stables, paddocks, pastures and beloved racing trophies—
priceless in sentimental value.

Hundreds of racing men and friends from all over England braved the snow-blocked roads to crowd into Millcroft, ten-room house where England's popular jockey lived and trained horses until his death
two years ago.

Steve's young son Pat stood sadly
by while his father's possessions went under the hammer.

"My position is not enviable," he said. "Father died without making a will and, according to the law, the estate must be sold."

Pat outbid the crowd to retain the Manchester Gold Cup by paying £450, then bought a few other family treasures which he said had "sentimental value."

But Steve's home went to a local horse trainer for £9,700.
Pat said: "It's not so much the house or grounds I mind losing, but I cannot bear to think of his trophies, for which he rode so brilliantly, going to strangers. I am glad I was able to get his gold-mounted whip, which was presented to him by King George V, withdrawn from the sale."—United Press.

A 20th Century Fox Picture.This is the story of THE MAN WHO CAUGHT RUDOLF HESS

NOW that I am under no further obligation to HM Forces and Rudolf Hess has been sentenced, at the Nuremberg Trials, the true story of Hess's apprehension after he landed at Eaglesham, Scotland, can be told for the first time.

The purpose of the former Deputy Fuehrer's visit to Britain is still a mystery to the general public, but I say, and with confidence too, that high-ranking Government officials were aware of his coming. No air raid warning was given that night, although the Nazi markings on the plane must have been distinguished during his flight over the city of Glasgow. Nor was the plane plotted at the anti-aircraft control room for the west of Scotland.

I was the man who apprehended Rudolf Hess, although the name he gave me was Alfred Horn.

The date

It began in a glorious summer evening in May 1941—the close of a perfect day for all who were free to enjoy it by sea, river or lake, or on the wind-swept moor. I could have been found in the study atmosphere of a signal operations room anxiously awaiting 1800 hours, and my relief.

You may have guessed the cause of my anxiety. I had a date. We had arranged to spend the evening dancing. I was going to meet her in the nearby village. "But what has this to do with Hess?" I can hear you asking. Everything. All that followed resulted from that unfulfilled engagement.

Came six o'clock, my relief, and the knock-out. By orders—and the best laid schemes of privates are often ruined by orders—I was to return to billets at once. All leave and passes had been cancelled. That news put me on the spot and quashed my hopes of a pleasant Saturday night. But orders or no orders I was determined to keep my date, though the dance was out of the question.

How I got out of my billet or what passed between us is nobody's business. The time passed all too quickly. The rapidly gathering gloom warned me that it was time to part.

After leaving my friend, I made my way back to billets without being challenged.

The plane

HEADQUARTERS were in an old castle standing in extensive grounds. The main road ran past the entrance gates; from it a secondary road formed a boundary to the grounds at the side and back of the castle. Little of the castle could be seen from the drive, as the road, as the main drive ran through an avenue of huge fir trees. Part of the grounds were thickly wooded with beech, birch, larch and mountain ash, while the rhododendrons have the reputation of being some of the finest in Scotland.

To outward appearance, the castle seemed to be a palatial residence, but once inside, one realised that it had suffered heavily from the ravages of time, many of the rooms being uninhabitable. The east wing, however, was still in good repair, so naturally it was commandeered by officers and NCOs. To accommodate the rest of the unit, huts were erected behind the castle, and it was in one of these huts that I was billeted.

I was still lost in reverie and my companions were snoring in three different keys, when I heard the unmistakable drone of a low-flying aircraft increasing rapidly to a nerve-racking roar, which brought me back to earth with a jolt. The snoring stopped abruptly as three sleepers woke, jumped out of bed, and were outside in a matter of seconds. We were standing there in various stages of undress as the plane zoomed low over the huts. We saw it plainly, but owing to the fading daylight we could not make out the markings. From the noise of the engine and the design of the plane, we guessed it was not one of ours. Like a giant moth it circled the castle and went off in the direction of the city. The drone diminished and finally died away, leaving us asking: "If that was a Jerry, what the devil does he want? As none of us knew the answer to that, it was at least unanimous that he was flying dangerously low.

Slowly we returned to the hut talking and chatting nineteen to the dozen. Scarcely had the last man climbed into bed again when the plane was again heard approaching. Out we dashed, and the machine was clearly to be seen about 2,000 feet up, and losing height rapidly. Twice the pilot circled the castle.

Suddenly, the engine cut out. The sudden cessation of the pulsating roar was so startling and unexpected that we almost stopped breathing in our tense excitement.

I remember shouting involuntarily: "Look out, boys, she's going to crash." Then, as my brain began to function again: "Down, in case there's bombs."

Everyone dropped down as if shot as, with a resounding crash, the aircraft burst its nose in the ground and tongues of flames flickered in and out of the wreckage.

Above the crackling of the burning plane a shot rang out—and down went our noses in the dust.

Raising my head, I stared intently in the direction from which the shot appeared to have been fired; and, looking around, saw to my astonishment a small dangling form, a parachute, which seemed like a huge mushroom silhouetted against the darkening sky.

Calling one of the men to follow me, and yelling to the rest to stay where they were, I started to run towards the spot where I calculated the parachutist would ground. The way was across a ploughed field. Have you ever tried to do a 220 yards sprint across a farrow with untraced boots on? If so, you can guess what that run was like. I broke no records though I nearly broke my neck.

Stumbling and cursing, I made my way to the shapeless bulk of the discarded parachute.

The farmhouse

A figure loomed out of the darkness about ten yards from the back door of the farmhouse. It was an airman and he was limping. I hurried him into the farmhouse, and the lady of the house ushered him into a chair in front of the fire.

The room was a typical Scotch farmhouse kitchen, clean, cosy and tidy.

The aviator made an imposing figure in his leather flying suit, and at first I thought he was one of our own boys who had come to grief while trying out a captured German plane; more especially as there had been no anti-aircraft fire directed at him and no sirens sounded.

I said to him: "Excuse my appearance, but I am a soldier."

I must confess I did not look much like a service man as my rig consisted of a pair of slacks, a vest, a pair of unlaced boots and a pair of Maltese socks, which are no socks at all. Compared with the well-groomed stranger, I felt like a comic turn at a music hall.

His reply, couched in good English, gave me a nasty jar, for German intonations betrayed that he was a foreigner.

"Ho, ho," he chuckled, "a soldier!"

I stared at him, wondering whether he really could be a German.

The answer to my next question settled any doubt I might have had as to his nationality.

"Where have you come from?" I asked.

The reply was short and sweet and to the point.

"Munich."

I nearly collapsed with fright and astonishment.

The aviator

THE aviator was tall—a six-footer in fact—broad-shouldered and apparently in good condition despite his recent drop from the crashed plane. It takes me all my time to reach five feet four inches. I'm no modern Hercules at that. One good smack from that hefty fist of his, I thought, and you'd be another featherweight. To cover my confusion I repeated the question and received the same brief answer.

This was getting us nowhere, so to open up the conversation I remarked: "They make good beer in Munich, don't they?"

His keen-set eyes sparkled beneath his dark, bushy eyebrows as he answered my question with another: "Why, yes. Have you been to Munich?"

"No," I replied, "but I have tasted Munich beer in Hamburg."

For the first time since Hess, one-time Deputy Fuehrer of Nazi Germany, landed by plane in Scotland on May 10, 1941, the true story of how he was captured and taken to a Scottish farmhouse near Glasgow, is told, exclusively to Hongkong Telegraph readers, by

DANIEL McBRIDEformerly of the Royal Corps of Signals, who is now in Hongkong

In the heyday of the Nazis, Nuremberg was the scene of mass party rallies. This picture was taken at the 1938 rally, and shows Hess (right) saluting Hitler. It was also in Nuremberg that Hess was tried last year by the Allied War Crimes Tribunal, and sentenced to life imprisonment.

My answer evidently amused him, for he laughed so heartily that I perceived had to join in, though my knees were saying one to the other "Hit me and I'll hit you back."

I did not feel exactly on the top of the world, hobnobbing with a German airman big enough to tie me in little knots even though I had a companion standing at the door, for he confessed afterwards that his legs felt as if they were made of soft copper wire.

The man might have been armed for all I knew.

The telephone

SEEING that he was evidently suffering from twinges of pain which he could not entirely conceal, I asked if he had been hurt in the crash. He admitted that his right leg had been doubled up under him when he landed and was slightly sprained. I asked him to sit down and make himself comfortable. He lowered himself gingerly into the armchair and stretched out his injured leg into a comfortable position.

As soon as he was settled down, I took up my interrogation:

"Was any other person with you in the plane?"

"No," he replied. "I was alone."

"Have you any arms?"

With an impish grin, he raised his arms in Hollywood style, saying:

"These are the only arms I possess."

"Was your plane armed?"

"No."

"What time did you leave Munich?"

As I shot this question at him I kept a close watch on him, but he answered without hesitation:

"About 6.30 p.m. this evening."

At this point we were interrupted by the farmer's wife who came in to ask us if we would like a cup of tea.

I accepted the kind offer without hesitating, as I felt that I needed something to steady my nerves, but the airman expressed a preference for water and stuck to his decision though I tried to persuade him to have tea. I offered him a cigarette but he declined it with thanks.

From the doorway my companion was watching the proceedings with interest.

Under the steady influence of the hot tea, my mind began to function more or less normally, and I suddenly realised that it was my duty to report the incident to HQ some two to three hundred yards away, and ask them to send an escort and means of transport for the injured enemy airman.

Fortunately, there was a telephone installed in the farmhouse and I put through a call.

It took me nine minutes to get through to HQ, and when I reported my find the operator asked if I had gone "crackers!" It took some time and nearly all my scanty stock of patience to convince HQ that I was not leg-pulling or suffering from a "hang-over." Then I was casually informed that no driver was available at the moment, but they would condescend to send an escort at once and, with this I had to be content.

The idea

FORTY minutes later, to the dot, an escort did arrive, but not from our HQ, although the farmhouse was so near and the only one in the vicinity. The escort could have crawled on hands and knees there and back several times in that waiting period. Probably when this war is over and ancient history, a tattered and tattered with snow-white hair and knee-length beards will totter up to the farmhouse asking for a bored out enemy airman to be handed over to them.

Cursing HQ and all its works and ways, I slipped back to have another look at the stranger. He was staring into the fire deeply immersed in thoughts, which were evidently not too pleasant, judging by the grim expression on his tired face.

Satisfied that he was all right, I went back to the telephone to carry out an idea that had suddenly come into my head. I was friendly with the news editor of a national newspaper, and I realised that here at this lonely farmhouse was news—news with a capital "N." That being so, my friend might as well have the first option on it.

I rang him up and, note the contrast, I made contact with him in less than a minute.

He listened to my story without interrupting me, nor, did he cast doubt on my sanity. All he said was: "O.K. Mac, I'll send a man over right away to cover it. Thanks for the tip."

And the reporter detailed for the job carried out his instructions to the letter, the public reading of their Sunday morning papers would probably have learnt that Rudolf Hess had landed in Scotland, forty eight hours before it eventually became public gossip.

On my return to the kitchen I found the prisoner—for such he virtually was until such times as I was relieved of my charge by an escort—sipping a glass of water, while on the table was another cup of tea for me.

Sitting down I began to drink the tea. With the cheerful blaze of the fire radiating warmth and comfort, it seemed strange and unreal that we were enemies and that in many lands on that summer night our respective countrymen were hell-bent on slaughtering each other, aided in their grim task by every means that man's ingenuity and modern science could devise.

The card

SURREPTITIOUSLY I took stock of the stranger, admiring his fine physique, the black head of hair, and noting more especially the keen, clear eyes shadowed by bushy, black eye-brows.

As I watched, he stretched out his right leg, and a twinge of pain contorted his face momentarily.

I enquired if the injury was painful. An affirmative nod of the head was the only reply.

Just then I noticed what had previously missed my attention—a pile of thin cardboard strapped to his right knee. Greatly daring—for I did not know if he would resent my action—I unstrapped the card for closer inspection. It resembled a postcard and was covered with figures and letters. I tried to decipher them but the task was beyond my skill. I might just as well have tried to read the Rosetta Stone or the royal cartouche on an Egyptian mummy case.

Baffled, I asked the airman to translate them for me, but an enigmatic smile was his only reply to my request. So I had another try on my own, but again I had to admit failure.

The disappearance

I PLACED the card on the arm of my chair and turned round to take another drink of tea. Just then the farmer's wife distracted my attention by asking me if I would like another cup of tea and something to eat. I refused with thanks. When she had gone, I found that the card had disappeared. I asked the prisoner if he had taken it, but he denied having done so. I looked into the fire but there was no sign of it there, no betraying ash.

That intrigued me, so I made a meticulous search of the room but without result. During my abortive search I checked the notice the prisoner's hand slipping into a large pocket similar to that on a soldier's battledress uniform. I made a grab at his hand while it was still in his pocket. His head shot vigorously in denial as he pulled his hand, empty, out of his pocket.

I searched the pocket, expecting to find either the card or some weapon. I was disappointed to find nothing there. The disappearance of the card had me worried one moment it was there, the next it had vanished into thin air apparently.

To this day I have never solved the mystery, but evidently the authorities knew all about it, for it was mentioned in the official report about the incident. How and when it turned up I have never found out.

Rupert and Ninky—52

The conjurer replaces the slender at go as shell. "There, little bear," he says, "your donkey now full of good magic. He no rump too high and he only jump when you tell him." "Oh, do let me try," cries Rupert. "I am p. Ninky!" At once the little donkey bounces about six inches of the table. "Goody, goody!" laughs Tiggly. "Donkey, a o w work properly! All well that end well!" The conjurer smiles grimly. "No thanks to you, naughty girl," he says. "It lucky that Rupert bring Ninky to me!"

HAIR AND HAT!

To-day the Smart Woman, whether young or old, plans her Hair and Hat partnership amicably... so says John Hall, nationally known hair stylist. There is not just one type of hairdo or hairline for Fall and Winter. There are several but the "Buns" are still "on top!"

John Hall has given much thought to his hair style. The silhouette of the hair is beautiful and dramatic. There are Pillboxes, most becoming to all women, because the bun nestles at the back, and the sides of the hair under the Pillbox may be softly waved or brought up for height. Then there is the high-top Bun, which is worn down on the right side so that the entire left side of the hair shows. This is a fine hair-hat profile for adding height to any face. The designer and his fashion co-ordinator, Gail, have worked out several new hair-styles to go with your new hats.

If you like chignons, you will love the twisted-to-one-side mammoth bun, worn either directly over the left ear or directly behind it, the shape of your face determines which. If you have short hair, good; if you have long hair it is equally good.

For the "perfect" type of face, the Oval, there is a new, severe cloche hat, worn almost to the neckline and often beyond, to the shoulders, with little or no hair showing. Very extreme and, as Mr. Hall sees it, good "press news" but not likely to be worn by every woman. He says that it is only for the Young and Beautiful because the stark "naked" face, without flatteringly hair is very trying. But there is a modified cloche which shows a portion of that side-wave flat against the face.

Position is a word for the "18th Century Look" in clothes. To-day's hairdo, with waved sides and bun in the back is reminiscent of that period. To-day the buns are large, like a high puff, and more often with a section of the hair outlining them. Try out these and work out a hairdo for your hat!

Woman Is A Cake Of Soap

By BARBARA BUNDSCHU

The modern woman's obsession with fashion is as neurotic as the feminism of her grandmother's pinster sister, and it rises from the same cause—her "basic failure" as a woman.

That conclusion is reached by author Ferdinand Lundberg and psychiatrist Maryline F. Fairham in their recently published book, "Modern Woman: The Lost Sex."

To-day's feminine striving for "glamour" is something new in history, the authors say, and something distinctly unhealthy. Before the industrial revolution "women, usually, had more important things to think about. But the day man left home to work and the children left home for school and the can opener replaced the preserving kettle, women began casting about for means to restore their so-called deflated egos," the authors believe.

They tried again, "men" with the feminist movement, but that didn't work.

Endless Replicas
"The wholly synthetic woman of fashion now being turned out in endless replicas like cakes of soap or tin cans, was more or less unconsciously modelled upon the Barry, Marlene de Montepuez, Pompadour or other less widely known mistresses of 18th century kings and emperors," the authors say.

The ancient Indian was thought they had got their own back with the furbelows of the courtesans didn't know that those esteemed ladies had no more satisfaction than themselves, they add. What they wanted and got for their attractions was simply money.—United Press.

Emotional Training Course For Children Declared Successful

BY ALTON L. BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Science Correspondent

A new kind of emotional training to prevent children from developing mental illnesses is being tested in 26 Delaware schools with promising results.

It marks one of the first solid steps in preventive mental hygiene—a "medicine" to keep persons emotionally healthy.

The experiment is simple, and fun for the youngsters. It consists of a weekly class in human relations and emotions given at the age when children are maturing rapidly.

Each lesson starts with story telling involving different emotional problems and personality traits. Then the pupils, in informal discussion, analyze the emotions and their causes. They also tell of their own similar experiences, thereby often bringing into the open happenings which had worried them.

The idea was started by Dr. M. A. Tarumian, director of the Delaware State Hospital, and sponsored by the Delaware State Society for Mental Hygiene under the direction of H. Edmund Bullis, executive director, and Miss Emily O'Malley.

Personality Conflicts

About half the patients in mental hospitals have no sign of organic or physical trouble, Bullis explains. They cracked up because of emotional and personality conflicts and frustration. They were not strong or mature enough emotionally to handle their problems. Many times their troubles can be traced back to childhood, especially in those who were shy, friendless children.

The Delaware workers believe that children can be taught to have strong personalities to meet crises better. Schools teach physical health. Why, they reasoned, shouldn't schools also teach mental health?

Particular attention is paid to the shy, extremely introverted child. Shy children in each class are discovered through written tests in which all pupils nominate the person he would choose for hikes, for class treasurer, etc. Some pupils get 30 votes in a class of 30 pupils. But always, Bullis says, three or four children receive no vote or only one or two votes. They may be intelligent and personable, but they are not socially acceptable to the group. About 15 percent of the class is usually in this category. Tests, using games, show the same percentage even in the first or second grades.

Emerging From Shell

Nancy, a 12-year-old, received few votes in such a test. She did not participate in the first few classes. But now she is one of the most eager participants, has emerged from her shell, and found increasing popularity.

Class room stories deal with show-offs, with students who pretend illness because they feared the next day's tests, with day-dreamers, with fears and their build-up, with the pursuit of human emotions and activities based on emotions.

Discussing fears, 11-year-old Bill said he was afraid to bat in baseball because he might be hit by the ball, but he finally overcame the fear. Jimmy told how "funny" he felt until he found new friends in a new neighborhood. Carolyn said she wanted some candy her mother had hidden, but resisted temptation. Joe told how he avoided taking castor oil but regretted it when the stomach ache continued.

The course is given in regular English or social studies classes and is conducted by the regular teachers. It was first started seven years ago, and has expanded steadily, but it is still too early, Bullis says, to measure results fully. Teachers in numerous other states, however, already have adopted the course, some using it in younger grades and others in high school.—Associated Press.

China's Mortality Rate Highest

Dr. Borislav Boreck, chief medical officer for China of the UNO World Health Organisation, has estimated that China needs at least 200,000 doctors to guard her health adequately and now has only 12,000. With 25 deaths per 1,000 population annually, he said China has one of the world's highest mortality rates—chief causes being TB, malaria, kala azar (a disease borne by sand flies) and other diseases.—Associated Press.

SCIENTIFIC ASSAULT ON COMMON COLD

British scientists have appealed for volunteers to become infected with scientific colds and get paid for it.

Free beer, expense-paid vacations, use of six-room houses away from mothers-in-law, and payment of three shillings and ninepence a day for spending money are some of the enticements offered for those willing to sneeze under medical supervision for 10 days in the interest of science and mankind.

"We only run a little fluid up the nose once," explains a Health Ministry doctor in a persuading manner.

The reason the officially-sponsored common cold research unit is offering all these inducements to volunteers, an officer explained, is that the chimpanzee is the only animal known to catch a cold like a human, and right now there is a shortage of chimpanzees, which are difficult animals to handle anyway.

The experiment is being conducted in the Harvard Hospital, Salisbury, and is considered to be the first assault of its kind on the common cold.—Associated Press.

Redwood Trees May Migrate

The redwood tree, now found only in California, may some day again "take to the road" and migrate to other parts of the world as it has in the past, a University of California scientist predicts.

Dr. Ralph W. Chaney, professor of paleontology and the world's leading expert on redwoods, said fossil records show that 50,000,000 years ago the trees lived in Alaska, Asia and Europe. Climatic changes caused the trees to migrate south until now they live only in California.

He said a new migration would not start for several hundred lifetimes and perhaps not for millions of years.—United Press.

Chinese Society In Indonesia

Incredible as it will seem, North and South were supposed to be good players, and this was their bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 diamond	Double	3 hearts	Pass
2 diamonds	Pass	4 hearts	Pass

West opened the club queen—not that it mattered—and South proceeded to win all 13 tricks, merely by guessing the right way to play the spade suit!

As was to be expected, a rather violent argument immediately broke out between North and South, each blaming the other for the failure to reach even a game contract. North's contention was confined to the single point that South should have bid three no trump at the point where he actually bid four diamonds. South's remarks were somewhat more general—but a great deal more justified. Let me summarise:

The two-heart bid directly over the talcote double (which was distinctly shaded) was not a strong bid—normally, it would announce only a good heart suit and nothing on the side. With an all-around good hand North would certainly re-double—or should, South pointed out. Well, what could South do except rebid his diamonds when void of hearts? Then, on the next round, when North could apparently do nothing more constructive or encouraging than to rebid his hearts, how could South risk any more aggressive bid than four diamonds? How could he know that spades were even stopped? The verdict, of course, is that South bid correctly under the circumstances, but that North bid atrociously. He should have redoubled, and then shown both hearts and spades—and if necessary, no trump.

egg-dust made of glass?

PENDING the time when houses will be built faster than sound, science has been turning its attention to eggs. Wrap an egg in a plastic covering and it will be fresh nine months hence. From this it is but a step to eggs made entirely of plastic. These should remain fresh for fifty years, having in mind that the word "fresh" means to-day, in matters of food, "no staler" than when it was manufactured. Egg powder wrapped in plastic ought to out-last the Pyramids. And if I'm sorry. Here comes that Mrs. Wowle.

Mrs. Wretch classifies everything

THOSE sharp-eyed lads who say, "If we export everything we make, there will be nothing for people at home to buy," had their answer from Mrs. Wretch the other day. "The money thus saved," said she, "can be used to meet higher taxation, which will produce still more goods for export, and will enable the Government to improve social services by nationalizing more things."

Nanking Unable To Fight Beyond Year's End, Observers Say

Nanking, Mar. 5. Military quarters here revealed that the General Headquarters of the Chinese land forces has moved from Nanking to Huochow in north Kiangsu, where top-ranking generals have already arrived.

A well-informed foreign observer told Reuter to-day that the National Government could hardly continue military operations beyond the end of this year in view of the present economic crisis and the tremendous military expenditure caused by the civil war. That is the reason why the Nationalists are now going all out to secure a decision on the battlefield.

Planes Bomb Ice Jam To Stop Floods

Prague, Mar. 5. Czechoslovak army planes to-day bombed an ice jam on the Danube near Komarno with 50-kilogram bombs, in an effort to forestall the floods which threaten the entire Danubian basin with the rising temperature.

A jam had formed around a war-wrecked railroad bridge. Townspeople were warned that air-bombing would continue to-morrow with a red rocket fired as a warning 20 minutes before the bombing started.

Air bombs were used last week by the Bulgarian air force to smash a 12-metre ice wall on the Danube at Orhovo, between Lom and Russe, after dynamiting had failed. Before the wall was blasted, the Danube flooded miles of farmlands on the Rumanian side.

Warsaw reported that the haw speeded blasting operations at the mouth of the Vistula and around bridges on all large rivers. The Polish Ministry of Communications said the Vistula ice was 60 centimetres thick, the Oder ice 50 centimetres and the San River 120 centimetres.—United Press.

KEDAH LABOUR TROUBLES

Singapore, Mar. 5. The popular local paper, Morning Tribune, in the first editorial on the riots in Kedah, said that the present trouble appears to have resulted from a crude attempt to impose some form of syndicalism on individual plantations.

The paper declared that the attempt doubtless was undertaken in entire ignorance of the conditions obtaining in the peninsula. "Labourers of Kedah, poorly paid before the war and suffering greatly during the occupation, have been disappointed at the course of events since the end of war and have proved easy material upon which the agitator has exercised his wiles," the paper said.

It added: "The situation has contained all the makings of serious trouble, but, hitherto, the authorities, by the exercise of great restraint have been able to avoid any really serious incident."—Reuter.

FIGHT FOR MILLS

Solomons said the date of the bout would be announced shortly.—United Press.

ROYAL BAGGAGE CAR DERAILED

Aboard the Royal Train, Mar. 5. A freight train travelling an hour behind the Royal cars was derailed to-night, en route from Umtata to Queenstown. It was carrying extra baggage for the Royal party.

Unconfirmed reports said the engineer was killed and another person seriously injured.—United Press.

ARGUMENT OVER JAP DRUG TRADE

New York, Mar. 5. The United Nations, through the action of the 11-nation committee of the UN Economic and Social Council, to-day took over from the defunct League of Nations worldwide control of narcotic drugs, but failed to agree to banish Japan forever from the narcotics trade.

The Committee, at Russia's request, postponed action on a proposal to forbid Japan to export any narcotics and to limit Japanese imports of narcotics to quantities which the Control Board estimates essential for legitimate home needs.

New Zealand's Walter Nash provoked a division by objecting to permanent prohibition of Japanese narcotics exports. The Chinese Government's request that no problems other than the German and Austrian treaties be settled at the Moscow Conference without China's previous consent.

He added that no fresh negotiations with the Soviet authorities have taken place concerning Manchurian problems, nor have there been formal talks with the French over the Far East.

A Ministry of Communications spokesman disclosed that the draft of the Sino-British air treaty has been completed, but he refused to reveal details. He said that negotiations have now been completed as far as the British Air Mission is concerned. Routes for direct flights between the two countries and technical problems, such as landing permission, have all been settled.—Reuter.

Air Lift for Communists

Nanking, Mar. 5. The United States Embassy disclosed last night that the number of Communists who must be airlifted to Yenan greatly exceeds the number originally submitted to Gen Marshall by Communist leader, Gen Chou En-lai, for emergency evacuation.

This is believed to be due to addition of "border line" cases such as newspaper publishers and book-store operators, who now feel their continued presence in Nationalist areas are unhealthy. The Embassy said the Chinese Government has promised transportation for the Communists in addition to the American facilities, and expects evacuation to be completed by March 8.

A C-54 is taking 50 from Chungking to-day and 50 more on Friday. The Nanking group will leave at the same time as the Shanghai group, which arrived by train yesterday afternoon.—United Press.

King Reported Indisposed

Umtata, Mar. 5. King George VI was somewhat indisposed on rising to-day, sources on the royal train said. They explained that he had slept poorly on the train, which had severely jolted along certain stretches of the line.

The King, however, betrayed nothing of this as, clad in white naval uniform, he accepted the greetings of the inhabitants of the native territories of the Eastern Cape. Members of the five main tribes in the territories, which cover an area as big as Switzerland, assembled in their thousands and gave a vociferous welcome to the royal family.

Six chiefs and 24 minor leaders filed before Their Majesties to receive autographed pictures and silver medals. Most wore western dress.—Associated Press.

HOME SOCCER RESULTS

London, March 5. Results of football games played in England and Scotland to-day were: Third Division, Southern: Exeter, City 3 Queen's Park Rangers 0. Scottish League Cup, Quarter-finals, second leg: Aberdeen 3 Dundee 2 (Dundee eliminated). Dundee United 1 Rangers 1 (Dundee United eliminated). Hibernians 1 Alderstonians 0, (after 30 minutes) extra time. Alderstonians eliminated. East Fife 2 Hearts 5 (East Fife eliminated).—Reuter.

Delegates Bound For Moscow

Berlin, Mar. 5. The British delegation of 150, headed by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Ernest Bevin, arrived at Berlin at 2.35 p.m. to-day. Delegations from three countries who will discuss the future fate of Germany at the Moscow conference are expected to make brief visits here during the next three days.

General George Marshall, U.S. Secretary of State, is due in Berlin on Saturday by air.—Reuter.

Marshall's Doubts

Washington, Mar. 5. General George Marshall, United States Secretary of State, left Washington by air to-day on his way to attend the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Moscow.

He told correspondents that it now appeared extremely doubtful whether the actual draft of the German peace treaty could be completed for consideration at the conference.

He added: "I fully recognise that negotiations at Moscow will be extremely difficult and their consequences momentous."

He expressed the hope that the Austrian treaty could be considered and that the Big Four Foreign Ministers could reach a complete agreement on that treaty before the conference was over.

General Marshall said that he would be very pleased if they were successful in reaching an agreement on major fundamental principles which must be the basis of the treaty with Germany.—Reuter.

U.S. DICTATING TERMS ON ATOM CONTROL—GROMYKO

New York, Mar. 5. Mr. Andrei Gromyko, Soviet delegate, accused the United States of subordinating the interests of the United Nations to its own "narrow national interest" in the Security Council here to-day.

Congratulations Were Mutual

Captains on the Tests

Sydney, Mar. 5. At the conclusion of the Test series to-day, both Don Bradman and Walter Hammond, captains respectively of Australia and England, spoke on the matches. "I heartily congratulate Australia on winning the rubber," said Hammond. "The decisive margin of three wins and two draws, in my opinion, indicates that the Australian team was superior in all departments of the game. Australia have a well balanced team, particularly strong in bowling, with many fine all-rounders and their fielding has been delightful to watch."

"It appears they will have a strong side for years. With the experience we have I feel sure that English cricket will respond and make a powerful challenge for the Ashes when Australia visit us in 1948."

"We look forward to continuation of that comradeship which always existed between us England and Australia on the cricket field and other phases of our national lives."

Mr. Bradman said: "I feel sure there is much in the current season for which we can all be most grateful. We must all remember the gallant lads who fell and made possible the resumption of these contests."

"The English team have endeared themselves to everyone in this country by their gallant efforts and modest bearing. It was fitting that the final game should have provided such thrilling cricket and personally I would like to see more matches played under such conditions, which give the bowler a real chance as was the case yesterday."

"It was a great blow that Hutton should have fallen ill at the critical stage. His presence could have turned the scales in England's favour."

"I sincerely trust that he will make a speedy and complete recovery. I regret very much that we shall not again have the pleasure of seeing Hammond playing in this country. Hammond's team were great sportsmen, against whom it was a pleasure to play."—Reuter.

The Soviet Union, he said, considered it impossible to have atomic control until all nations have signed the convention prohibiting atomic weapons.

Mr. Gromyko declared: "The conclusion of the convention prohibiting atomic weapons is an urgent task. Despite this, it has been delayed for many months. We are told that the United States is working on the convention until the Soviet Union accepts the United States plan for atomic control."

"This amounts to desire to dictate terms and an attempt by one country to impose its views on others in order to strengthen its monopoly in the atomic field."

"In this respect, the United States is subordinating the interests of other countries to its own narrow national interest."

"Without conclusion of a convention one cannot seriously speak about international atomic control. The serious defect in the Baruch plan is that it provides for turning the proposed international control authority into a vast international trust. One would only require to add the provision that profits should be shared according to the amount of stock held to get a complete picture," said Mr. Gromyko.—Reuter.

DIOCESAN OLD BOYS MEET

An extraordinary general meeting of the Diocesan School Old Boys' Association was held in the Jacobean Room, Hongkong Hotel, yesterday. New articles of association, recently redrafted by the Working Committee, were read out by the President, Mr. B. C. Randall, and passed unanimously.

Mr. Randall was re-elected President. Other officers for the year 1947 are Mr. G. A. Goodson and Mr. Wat Po-cheung, vice-presidents; Mr. Wong Ke-tsun, hon. treasurer; Mr. Douglas Mackenzie, hon. secretary; and the following members of the general committee: Messrs. D. S. Green, G. S. HUGE MALAYAN ARMS HAUL

Kuala Lumpur, Mar. 5. Thirty thousand Malaysian dollars, the highest ever, in the history of Malaysian police, has been paid for information which led to the recent discovery of a huge illicit arms and ammunition dump by the police on the summit of a 3,000-foot mountain nine miles from Kuala Lumpur.

It is not known whether the dump belonged to gangsters, who have been terrorising the whole of Malaya, or an illegal organisation which was prepared to distribute arms and ammunition in the event of a political crisis.—Reuter.

SNOWSTORMS KILL 17 IN EASTERN U.S.

London, Mar. 5. While parts of Europe to-day reported rising temperatures, the United States eastern seaboard was hidden under a snow-fall, 40 inches in places. Towns in Pennsylvania and northern New York State were isolated, but the snowstorms appeared to be moving out to the North Atlantic.

The storms caused 17 deaths—eight in New York State, six in Pennsylvania and three in New England.

Four deaths occurred in Portugal from floods, including the drowning of a three-year-old child in flooded streets at Santarem. Twenty feet of the ancient town wall of Loule collapsed, killing a workman and his seven-year-old twins and injuring his wife.

All over France, the temperature was rising, with rains and slight mist. Brussels said temperatures were slightly higher and that rain had fallen over Belgium. Snow fell in the Ardennes. In the Netherlands, hundreds of people are standing by to avert danger from dykes and bridges should the thaw come too quickly.

Bulmy air in Rome and milder weather in north Italy brought hopes that an exceptionally hard winter was over. Drizzling rain in western Germany washed away the weels' old blanket of snow. Icebound rivers were thawing. Icejams threatened vital bridges, notably on the Danube. The Berlin temperature was just below freezing, with light snow falling.—Associated Press.

Reprieve Asked For Condemned Africans

London, Mar. 5. A forthright demand for the "unconditional" reprieve of the five West African natives sentenced to death three years ago for a ritualistic murder and whose execution was reported to have been delayed no less than five times, was voiced to-day by the Daily Mirror and the Daily Graphic.

Criticising "Colonial governorship and its machinery" as "shamefully out of date," the Mirror said editorially: "The present system is a relic of the early colonial days. No governor should have the power of life or death over native subjects without reference to higher authority."

The Graphic condemned the "unnecessary mental torture to which these men have been subjected."

The execution was postponed a fifth time yesterday after Mr. Arthur Creech Jones, Colonial Secretary, called Sir Alan Burns, Governor of the Gold Coast, advising him of the strong feelings against the execution expressed by members in the House of Commons.—Associated Press.

Governor to Resign

Accra, Gold Coast, Mar. 5. Sir Alan Burns, Governor of the British Gold Coast, declined to-day to make any statement either about the reprieve of the five West Africans who had been due to be executed yesterday or about a report that he had tendered his resignation to the British Government.

The suspension of the executions followed a telegram sent to the Governor by Mr. Creech Jones, Colonial Secretary, indicating the feeling among members of Parliament that they should not take place.—Reuter.

Large amounts of equipment and munitions left behind by the retreating Viet Namhese were captured during these operations, which came as a surprise to the Viet Namhese leaders, it was stated.

French planes dropped reassuring leaflets as the troops progressed on the ground, and most of the villagers who fled in panic have now returned to their homes.

"An important mopping-up operation" was launched this morning about 30 kilometres from Hanoi by French forces, in the face of strong Viet Namhese resistance.—Reuter.

New Ambassador Appointed

London, Mar. 5. The Foreign Office announced to-night that the King had approved the appointment of Sir D. Gainer, British Ambassador in Rio de Janeiro, to succeed Mr. Victor Cavendish-Bentinck as Ambassador in Warsaw.

Also approved was the appointment of Sir J. V. Perowne, councillor in the Foreign Office, to be Minister Plenipotentiary at the Holy See in succession to Sir F. Osborne.—United Press.
